The Seven Traits of Change Readiness: Understanding Your Scores

Resourcefulness: Resourceful people are effective at taking the most of any situation and utilizing whatever resources are available to develop plans and contingencies. They see more than one way to achieve a goal and can look in less obvious places to find help. They have a real talent for creating new ways to solve old problems. People with low resourcefulness tend to they get stuck when they encounter obstacles, dig in their heels, and revert to the old way of doing things. People with very high scores (over 26) might overlook obvious solutions and create more work than is necessary.

Optimism: Optimism is highly correlated with change readiness since the pessimist observes only problems and obstacles while the optimist recognizes opportunities and possibilities. Optimists tend to be more enthusiastic and positive about change. Their positive outlook is founded on a faith in the future and the belief that things usually work out for the best. Very high optimism scorers (over 26) may lack critical-thinking skills.

Adventurousness: Adventurous people are inclined to take risks and have the desire to pursue the unknown. Adventurous people love a challenge. Since change always involves both risk and the unknown, they usually perform well during organizational shake-ups. They are usually the employees who initiate and create change. But very high scores (over 26) may indicate a tendency toward recklessness.

Passion/Drive: Passion is the fuel that maximizes all the other traits. If you have passion, nothing appears impossible. If you do not, change is exhausting. Passion is the individual's level of personal dynamism. It shows up in a person's level of intensity and determination. To make a new process work, to overcome the problems that any plan for change may produce, you need passion and enthusiasm. Very high scorers (over 26), however, tend to be bullheaded, obsessed, and heading for burnout.

Adaptability: Adaptability includes two elements: flexibility and resilience. Flexible people have goals and dreams, but they are not overly invested in them. When something does not work out, they go on to Plan B. Adaptability is the capacity to rebound from adversity quickly with a minimum of trauma. Failure or mistakes do not usually deter them. They do not dwell on them but bounce back quickly and move on. High scorers on this trait are not wedded to specific outcomes. If the situation changes, their expectations shift right along with it. Scoring too high (over 26) in this trait indicates a lack of commitment or stick-to-it-ness.

Confidence: Confidence is the belief in your own ability to manage any situation. High scorers are individuals with a strong sense of self-esteem. But more specifically, they believe they can make any situation work for them. Scorers above 26 may indicate a cocky, know-it-all attitude and lack of receptivity to feedback.

Tolerance for Ambiguity: The one certainty surrounding change is that it is uncertainty. No matter how carefully you plan it, there is always an element of ambiguity. Without a healthy tolerance for ambiguity, change is not only uncomfortable; it is scary. But too much tolerance (over 26) can also get you in trouble. You may have difficulty finishing tasks and making decisions.
